The facility is a multi-story structure in the middle of town; it houses the Sheriff’s Office, county court rooms and administrative offices, the county 911/dispatch center, and the jail. The secure perimeter of the building is the exterior walls of the building. All exterior doors are under monitored camera surveillance and controlled by central control officers. The 58 surveillance camera network also monitors all of the housing units, common areas, and movement corridors. There is no perimeter fencing around the building but the entire perimeter is under constant monitored surveillance camera coverage. Once each shift an unarmed officer patrols the perimeter of the building on an irregular schedule to identify existing or potential security breaches.

The jail contains six general population housing units. Five housing units are for male detainees and one for female detainees. There is no dedicated special management unit. Detainees worthy of such status are sheltered in place and subject to restricted movement and comingling. All movement is escorted. The five male housing units are two-tier design ranging from eight to twelve cells per unit and two to four beds in each cell. The female housing unit is a ten-bed dormitory. Direct supervision is the management model in all housing units. Overall the facility is maintaining an adequate level of cleanliness.

All housing units have a dayroom equipped with one television and fixed dining/seating tables where detainees can play board games, cards, and engage in social interactions with one another and eat their meals. Each housing unit has one kiosk on which detainees can file requests; submit grievances; shop at the commissary; review activity schedules, bulletins, pro bono/consulate lists and handbook content; submit medical call pass requests; partake in video-visits; and access the LexisNexis law library collection. All detainees have access to outdoor recreation for at least one hour a day five days a week.

Detainees were noticeably polite to staff and spoke freely with the inspection team. The inspection team conducted several interviews with detainees in public, private, and confidential settings. Some of the LEP interviews were assisted by the use of a language line. Detainees voiced no substantive complaints or concerns when questioned about their personal safety, treatment by staff, medical care, asylum requests, consulate/court access, ICE services, visiting privileges, law library access, or food services.

Medical care is provided by two Montgomery County contract nurses and one Advanced Correctional Healthcare, Inc. contract physician. Food service is contracted to Consolidated Food Services, Inc.
